COST SEGREGATION

For income tax purposes, commercial property owners and real estate investors typically depreciate the property over a period of 39 years. However, it's important to note that a property, whether it's a residence, office building, warehouse, or any other real property, consists of more than just the structure itself. It also includes various other elements such as plumbing fixtures, carpeting, sidewalks, fencing, and more.

While these elements could be depreciated over five, seven, or 15 years if purchased separately, they are usually acquired as part of a building acquisition or development and depreciated over the same useful life as the rest of the building, which is either 27.5 or 39 years.

To take advantage of an accelerated depreciation timeline for certain building components, a cost segregation study is conducted. This study examines each element of the property, categorizes them separately, and enables you to benefit from a faster depreciation schedule for those specific components.
